“ Sorry for your loss.

I also remember the story my sister shared with you and your family. I recall the nights when Roy would come for pigs from our farm. I was just a young girl. I always looked forward to that night when I would get to hold the gate closed while Roy would wrestle with the pigs he wanted. When he found the perfect one I would open the gate for him to load it in his truck. Yes, Roy always would pick the ones with the black spots first.

I always wondered if they grew faster than the pigs with no spots?

When Roy had all the pigs he wanted, my Dad and Roy would then enter into deep conversation for at least an hour, solving the problems of the world.

When Roy and my Dad meet again, I am sure the conversations will continue.

My Deepest Sympathy to you all.

“ Learned of Roy's passing and thought I had to share this memory

As a kid I remember Roy would come to my parents farm, Mervyn & Violet Luckhardt to buy young pigs. When Roy would buy pigs from Dad he would pick the ones with the black spots first. One time Roy was coming to buy pigs and Dad didn't have any pigs with black spots on them so he painted one pig with a black spot. Sure enough Roy bought pigs and wanted the one with the black spot on it. Few months later Roy went on to tell Dad that he couldn't find that one pig with the black spot.

Not sure if Dad told him that day what he did but I bet Dad couldn't keep a straight face.

I remember hearing this story many times and the laughter that went with it.

I am sure the story will be told again and the laughter will flow when Roy and Dad meet again.

So sorry for your loss.
