“ My brother Dennis meant different things to each of us. He always had something he was working on that had big potential. I can't say that he chose and chased the right dreams nor can I say that he was happy with where the paths he chose, took him. So many didn't get the chance to get to know him as they would have liked to or as they deserved to. For that ...there are no words... In his last few years he became more of a withdrawn and a lonely person. He didn't say how he felt about the past. He was always looking ahead. Many of us might wish we tried to reach out to him more. But he seemed to want to be in control of that. I think he might have regretted that at times but didn't know how to go back. The good news is that we will all have another chance to spend time with those who have left us behind in this life. I will miss Dennis for his optimism, humour and wit. Let's look forward with love and hope. I hope to love more and live better than I did yesterday.
